Mammalian

The final recording session for the fifth part of the Mammal Trilogy was concluded with the recording of sensitive flute parts performed by Johannes Theurer. As you may be aware, sensitivity is not an area into which we normally stray but... er... anyway, this followed the brass session documented here, wherein Berlin's favourite polka band the Polkaholix donated (well, not donated – rented, actually, and they were not cheap, at least financially speaking) their brass section for limited Mammalian use.

And so the album is finished. So, that's that. Well. What to do? If anyone has any ideas, please let us know. There's that pile of stamps which has been hanging around for simply ages, waiting to be stuck in. Plus learning to speak German, that would take up a bit of time, we suppose. Laundry... Hmm, difficult one, really.

Wait, an idea! In June or July, we could do a gig in Berlin which would both celebrate the release of the Final Part of the Mammal Trilogy and Martin Gordon's birthday, simultaneously and also at the same time! And that would take up a lot of time and energy, and also dosh, what a splendid idea. We'll keep you informed.

Radio Stars

The people at Ace Records tell us that all the Radio Stars stuff ('Songs for Swinging Lovers' and 'Holiday Album') is now downloadable. Here, for example, via iTunes. But the indefinable extra material on the compilation 'Somewhere There's A Place For Us' remains available only on CD, at present. Remember CDs? They make very nice drinks mats, or toys for your pet Mole. You can see yourself in them, if you hold them up.

Video of the recent Radio Stars UK outing appears on YouTube, both from the huge London Forum (Arthur is Dead and Radio Stars) and the tiny Southampton Knitting Circle. Both performances have their own charm, we think. More will appear in the future.

Jet

There is no Jet news. Well, what do you expect, they are either dead or mad or look like Heinrich Himmler, and anyway they broke up over 247 years ago. OK, there is a bit of news. Former personal manager Jamie Turner (everybody needs a personal manager, dear) has discovered a poster from Jet's only gig featuring drummer Chris Townson, at the London Marquee in August 1874. When the poster appears, it will be digitised and relayed to the masses. This will relieve the current crisis in capitalism, end world poverty, ensure full employment for bankers the world over and provide a cure for all known diseases.

Apart from that, there's not much going on, really.
